

Talking about future

In a recent press conference the Minister of Education presented the main lines of the educational policy and the priority projects for the coming years.

Offering the best future perspectives to each child and young is the common ambition of the 85 projects that the Minister intends to accomplish in execution of the government program.

In this framework four new platforms have been put in place at the beginning of school year 2015/2016:

- An internet site www.zukunft.men.lu, dedicated to education policy and its projects
It informs on the developments and reforms of educational policies which are oriented around three main pillars: childhood, education and youth and 9 axes (multilinguism, implication of parents, teacher training, etc.). It gives insight on the ongoing transformation processes and shows how they are related to each other.
- A blog www.blog.men.lu, allows to follow political news and to submit one's opinion to the Minister
- A series of conferences on education, uniting representatives of all actors
- A tour of the Minister in the schools to favor exchange with teachers, pupils and parents

The approach of the Ministry of Education is thus turned towards interaction and communication with stakeholders and people. It aims at more proximity between the Ministry and education stakeholders allowing a greater reactivity to their concerns.
